Application Essay: Nursing

Florence Nightingale once said, "When you're a nurse, you know every day you will touch a life or a life will touch yours." These sentiments meant more than inspiration in influencing my decision to pursue a nursing course at the ABCDE University. My childhood dream is to become a healthcare professional. Like other nurses who share my passion, I am inspired by the need to help the less fortunate in society and help advance their health needs (Glerean et al. 91). My community is defined by health challenges such as disparities, inequalities, and inconsistencies that make it almost impossible to become healthy by the national standards. Thus, a chance to become a nurse will enable me to advance the healthcare needs of all, especially the less fortunate in my community.

Once I am enrolled in a nursing course, I will endeavor to influence change through relevant practices that are nursing-related and community-centered. In scenarios where health disparities define the challenges that people experience, I believe in the role of education in advancing health literacy and awareness to the communities as a major nursing intervention to drive change and expected outcomes. Moreover, university education provides the platform for engagement, consultation, theoretical frameworks, and practical understanding of the nursing roles and how they resolve people's health needs (Wilkes et al. 260).

Universities and other institutions of higher learning provide technical and professional skills and networking. This contributes to making nursing interventions more productive in achieving public health goals. In this regard, my decision is influenced by the desire to get the relevant skills, training, technical awareness, and exposure in one of these institutions that conform to the expectations of the nursing goals in communities. I reckon that being a nurse is a call and commitment. Anyone can pursue it, granted they have an interest, good grades, and get adequate training (Glerean et al. 95). These issues define the mechanisms and ideologies that shape the long-term reforms in the healthcare sector. My decision to pursue nursing is also influenced by the need to become an agent of change, including having the right mentality and approach to advance sustainable health to the vulnerable.

Nursing is an exciting job that allows one to make a difference in an individual's life. It is such outcomes that lure people like me to pursue nursing courses. For instance, my special interest is in elderly persons and terminally ill patients, who require special attention to advance their wellbeing. Social components of caregiving make nurses a crucial part of healthcare systems. Nurses must understand the roles of healthcare professionals in achieving career and personal goals (Wilkes et al. 263).

Nurses are essential service providers who do more than clinical and medical work. The nursing profession involves more than just healthcare provision and caregiving. It cuts across various aspects of health and social-related interventions that improve the health and wellbeing of the people. This relates to my passion for pursuing an interesting, challenging, humanistic, and health-related career. There is no better challenge and commitment-oriented task than being a healthcare provider. It is part of the call to help patients recover and have a positive mentality towards life. Thus, my decision to become a nurse and, consequently, apply to the ABCDE University is inspired by my desire to actualize my childhood dream and help the less privileged in my community.
