The University of ABCDE, School of Arts and Social Sciences Scholarship Essay

As a child of immigrant parents, I learned to be responsible at a tender age. Although my parents spoke English, I had difficulties expressing myself in English. It took a long time before I became a fluent speaker. I was motivated to learn English, so I could make friends. Nonetheless, my inability to speak fluent English did not stop me from posting good results in my studies. As a result, my teachers liked me more than the other kids in the school. This helped build my self-esteem and confidence, which has shaped my aspirations. Through education, my life and the lives of those depending on me could change for the better. I can achieve this through hard work and persistence in following my career goals and aspirations. I yearn to be a revolutionist who will be remembered worldwide for having contributed positively to the field of economics.

Going to school has been a challenge to my family and me; even getting basic needs is still a challenge. Sometimes I had to stay at home to look after my younger siblings as my parent went out in search of work. Other times, I stayed because of unpaid tuition fees, which my parents could not always afford to pay. After high school graduation, I had to look for odd jobs to complement my parent's income and pay some of the household bills. A few years back, I got an offer to pursue an undergraduate degree in economics at the University of ABCDE. The news gave me a sigh of relief; I would be able to pursue my dream career. I would eventually be able to provide for my family as I discharge my duties as an economist in the U.S. My education goal is to be able to work in the U.S. government's economics department.

The University of ABCDE is best known for its comprehensive public research involvement. Its ABC campus has three Nobel laureates in the physics department and one in the chemistry department. The university receives funding from NASA to facilitate research (Ewalt). Offering me a scholarship will help me realize my dreams of conducting research that positively impacts people's lives. Economics, which falls under art and social sciences, is key in understanding the past and future. Thus, it is vital in developing theories, models, and policies that enable governments, states, and nations to function more efficiently (Jones 308).

The scholarship will benefit my family, as it will lessen the burden of struggling to raise tuition fees. Through it, I will not be forced to put my studies on hold to help my parents provide for the family. A scholarship will breathe a new life into my dying career and enable me to realize my education goals. This will also go a long way in ensuring my study period is not inconvenienced in any way. In the long run, I want to become a revolutionist who will be remembered worldwide for having contributed to the field of economics like the great economist Adam Smith and John Keynes. I also want to establish a non-profitable organization with programs that will assist the less privileged in society, which will have a pool of resources that will assist them financially in pursuit of education.

Education is a crucial tool if used positively and can change many lives worldwide. This scholarship will motivate me to work harder; it will also give hope to less privileged persons and people of color that everything is possible in the U.S. I am certain that if I miss this scholarship, my career goals will remain a mere dream. However, given a chance, I will seize every opportunity that comes my way to ensure I graduate with honors in economics. Eventually, I will use my skills to give back to the community through non-profit organizations and charity work.
